SPECTACLE

'HERALD KNIGHTS'

'Herald Knights' is a spectacle renowned for its beauty, realism and constant interaction between performers and props.

The Royal Courts are coming to visit the city and wish for all citizens to come out to greet them. To this end, they send their Herald Knights to ride through the city streets on horseback, announcing their arrival with imperial drums and trumpets.

The "Herald Knights" show consists of a group of SIX HERALD KNIGHTS, dressed in the Royal Court's regalia, and their SIX HORSES. Three of them carry drums and the other three carry royal trumpets.

The horses are guided by Segways, concealed beneath the saddlecloths, creating the impression—thanks to the sound effects they are equipped with—that they are real horses. The Segway X2 models are suitable for any terrain and are highly manoeuvrable; with the modifications made for the show, they can be driven hands-free, allowing the operators greater freedom of movement to interact with the audience.

Each horse is equipped with a powerful sound system, which, through a transmission and reception system, plays a soundtrack in unison that transports the audience back to the Middle Ages.
